Of Orchids and Bees

And the earth brought forth grass, and herb yielding seed after his kind, and the tree yielding fruit, whose seed was in itself, after his kind: and God saw that it was good. (Genesis 1:12)

Coryanthes macrantha, commonly known as the bucket orchid, grows in Mexico and Central and South America. The pretty, but unassuming flowers form a little receptacle or bucket, into which the flower drips a strongly scented fluid. This scent attracts the flower's only pollinator – the beautiful, green, male orchid bee. On entering the flower, the bee falls into the bucket trap. But it is not the orchid's purpose to kill the bee. The bee soon finds a little step, and an escape hatch. However, the flower grips the bee and glues two pollen sacks to its back. When the glue is dry, the flower releases the unharmed bee, which makes its escape. The pollen sacks and the scent are essential to the bee's own courtship ritual with female bees. It is the orchid's scent which is attractive to the female.

If a male bee which already has pollen sacks on its back enters the bucket orchid, then the flower simply snatches the sacks off the back of the bee and releases it immediately, thus completing the flower's rather complicated pollination process.

Most articles about the orchid and the bee refer to their co-evolution, which has left them totally dependent on each other. Yet, no partially evolved orchid could survive. An orchid whose escape hatch was too big would release the bee without the pollen, while too small a hatch would trap the bee until it died. Either way, a partially evolved orchid could not pollinate. So-called co- evolution is clearly impossible.

September's Prayer letter:

At the end of July, we had the privilege of spending a week at Camp Hebron. I preached to a wonderful group of teenagers while Ginette taught a painting workshop. We also enjoyed spending time with Pastor Mario Roy and his wife Linda. It was obvious that the Lord was working in the lives of the teenagers as well as in the counsellors. We don't think of them as often, but God worked in a particular young man to see his need to go to Bible School to prepare him for ministry.

Here are some prayer requests:

- (1) Michel Caron's health,
- (2) Milad's and his family's salvation,
- (3) our outreach with our distribution ministry
- (4) for our safe travels in October to the Maritimes.

Thank you for investing for Eternity through us!

In the Harvest together,

Jacques & Ginette Brind'Amour

Here's an idea.... a pastor from Quebec is challenging pastors across Canada to pray at 9:38am and 9:38pm for the Lord to send labourers into the harvest field... 9:38 is based on Mat 9:38 Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers into His harvest.

This is a prayer for workers with the gospel to go and preach the Word of God...in Canada and beyond! Want to take up the challenge to pray? Let me know if you do. ~pb

Just For Fun

- The fact that Kansas and Arkansas are pronounced differently bothers me way more than it should.
- I was going to be frivolous today but I ran out of frivals.
- I have a memory like a rabbit's tail; short and fuzzy.
- While are most puns make me feel numb, mathematics puns make me feel number.
- I take people seriously. If someone says "make yourself at home" I rearrange their furniture and tell their kids to do their homework..
